Velo-city Global 2012 Conference

Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada

June 2012

Velo-city is widely considered the premier international cycling planning conference series in the world. The four day event is designed to encourage cycling as a part of daily transport and recreation.

Velo-city began in 1980 in Bremen, Germany and was heavily involved in the founding of the European Cyclists' Federation. Since then conferences have been held in cities including Copenhagen, Brussels, Barcelona, and Montreal. Based on the experience in these cities and due to increased global interest in cycling, we expect Velo-city 2012 to attract up to 1500 delegates.

Velo-city conferences bring together all those who are involved in the policy, promotion and provision of cycling facilities and programs. Engineers, Planners, Architects, Social Marketers, Academics, Researchers, Environmentalists, and Industry Representatives join forces with governmental and municipal Politicians, Civil Servants, Advocates, and Educators sharing knowledge and building effective trans-national networks delivering on-going benefits long after the last delegate has headed home. Velo-city is a global event, drawing attendees from all over the world and also appealing to delegates from related fields such as health and environment. Velo-city features an exciting mixture of sessions where the accent is on dialogue, participation, and information exchange. Delegates enjoy a quality experience that many repeat year after year.

Aims and Objectives of the Velo-city Series

The main aim of the conference is to bring together politicians, professionals, businesses, academics, and bicycle user representatives to increase the use of cycling as a daily healthy means of transport, as well as increase the levels of bicycle use.

Other important aims for the series are to:

- Spread knowledge of good, positive, evolving information about cycling, and cycle and transport planning on an international basis
- Provide valuable publicity for cities that have good cycle provision as an example to city inhabitants, businesses, and others who attend the conference
- Encourage the recognition of cycling as an efficient, healthy, environmentally friendly means of transport or recreation, and to promote its greater use
- Further the integration of cycle planning into transport and land-use planning, and other relevant sectors where cycling can play an important role
- Provide a meeting place and bring together those actively involved from all relevant fields, so that they can have a profitable exchange of experience and expertise
- Seek involvement from all relevant stakeholders

Velo-city Global 2012 Conference

Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada

June 2012

The goal for us is to bring the European cycling experience and its fast growth as a mode of transportation to North Americans especially, the Pacific Rim countries, and also globally so that the public, governments and municipalities can learn and then bring about local changes to move towards a more sustainable form of transportation within the context of the environment and personal health and obesity.
